The Entertainment Last Night.

A goodly audience greeted the initial entertainment by the Young Men's Literary Society, last night, and most agreeably was that goodly audience entertained.

There was a discussion between Willie Christman and Nicholas Hacker, that showed both thought and research; an essay was read by Miss Mattie Gordon that was neat in diction and good in point of matter; there were piano solos by Misses Ada Halliday, Josie Phillips and Emma Reilly that exhibited both taste and skill, and there were songs by Misses Clara Harrell and Relda Powers that were listened to with delight. Mr. Oberly delivered an address, of which we may not say more than it was well, even enthusiastically received. And so passed the evening—a very pleasant one to the parents and friends present, and one that will be remembered with pride by the members of the Y. M. L. Society.

Partly Versus Poison.—There is as much difference between Phalon's Vitallia or Salvation for the Hair and the fifth-charged hair-darkners, as between the Pool of Bethesda, that an angel stirred, and a fever-breeding mud pond. The Vitallia is a crystalline fluid, without a single impurity or noxious property, and the naturalness of the shades it imparts to grey hair is unequalled.

FREE TRADE.

The Meeting Last Night.

Only a few citizens responded to a call for a meeting in the court house, last night; but the promised free trade lecture by Mr. A. Lloyd, was delivered, nevertheless.

Mr. Lloyd has a good voice, a good appearance, easy gestures, and no one present last night can doubt that he fully understands the principles he has undertaken to disseminate. He gave a concise and interesting history of the tariff system, tracing it back even beyond the time when Rome and Carthage were at their zenith, to the very dawn of commerce. Among the Greeks and Romans commercial revenue laws existed, and to these the speaker referred somewhat in detail.

He defined a tariff as a specific tax levied upon the imports of a country to provide revenue for the support of the government. A tariff for revenue should be so adjusted as to burden to the least possible degree the industries of the people. A protective tariff is altogether another thing. While its professed object is revenue, its real purpose and effect are the promotion of individual or sectional interests. It is simply a device by which certain favored parties are taken into partnership with the government to advance their individual schemes at the expense of the masses; and in exact proportion with the degree of protection afforded those favored few, is and will be the diminution of the government's revenues.

Persons who favor a high protective tariff say that a diversified industry is essential to the prosperity of the country. No one will gainsay this proposition. This granted they go another step, and declare that "protection" is essential to the development, even the existence of diversified industry. Here the speaker bade the protectionists pause. He conceded no such fact. He denied that protection was needed in the development of the country's industries and resources, and then recalling the fact that three-fourths or more of our manufacturing establishments had attained a high degree of prosperity, under the tariff for revenue, he certainly fortified his position beyond successful assault. Variety of industry is the natural, inevitable order of civilized society. The tastes, judgment and interests of man impel them to it. The growth of manufacturing in the colonies, without legislative aid, and in opposition to the sentiment of the mother country, was proof on this head not to be contested. Pig iron was produced in Pennsylvania, previous to the Revolution, and exported to England in the very face of a protective duty. But, now, how changed? Pig iron cannot now be produced in that State, (according to the saying of the manufacturers, without protection.

In the year 1819 the products of manufacturing industry in this country, amounted to $200,000,000. If we will consider the difference in population and the purchasing power of money, we cannot now, with all our protection, boast of a superior prosperity. The restraints of the embargo then, are more than offset by our improved machinery now. He referred the advocates of protection to the condition of the country under the Hamilton and Walker tariffs the former in force eight years and the latter fifteen. A more prosperous period, for the revenues of the government, the success of our industries and the well being of our people was never known. Protection has created enormous and overshadowing monopolies in coal, lumber, salt, iron and woollens that are crushing out the substance of the people; it has advanced from ten to two hundred per cent. the cost of every article the poor man eats, wears or uses—is an oppression to the many that the few may roll in wealth and luxury.

The speaker declared that the American Free Trade league had no connection with either of the political parties of the day, but was eminently a creature of the people. It embraced the best men of both parties, and was confined to no particular section of the country. The time is at hand, the speaker thought, when all other questions must become subordinate to those of the tariff and finance. They would enter prominently into the politics of the country from this time forth, and all who favored cheap goods, an equalization of values, general and permanent prosperity, would be found their advocates.

We had occasion to hope that Mr. Lloyd, a gentleman and stranger in our city, would be given a respectful hearing, but in that we were disappointed. Mr. George Fisher, a government official, repeatedly interrupted him by questions, and once by flatly contradicting his assertion that the free trade movement had no connection with either of the present political parties. The speaker uttered but a truth, and if Mr. F. is ignorant of it, he need not keep his eyes open to see convincing assurance. Mr. Lloyd himself has noted with the republican party since 1860; but on the free trade platform he occupies ground where both democrats and his fellow radicals may gather in perfect harmony.

Rittenhouse and Hanny, desirous of closing out their present stock, will give patrons inducements that will insure sales. They have just added a fine line of prints etc., and have a very complete stock of seasonal goods, every article of which they will sell, without reserve, at greatly reduced prices. mar18st

The Athenaeum Last Night.

The announcement that the McKean Buchanan troupe would place Shakespeare's grand and poetic tragedy, Hamlet on the boards, filled every available seat in the Athenaeum. And most excellently was the large audience entertained. Mr. Buchanan, in the character of Hamlet, is without a superior. With a noble presence, and a care for every detail, he fairly enthralled the lookers-on, from the opening to the closing scene. His appeal to his father's ghost, his soliloquy over Yorick's skull; his anguish and disgust at his mother's perfidy held the audience in the most rapt attention, every ear giving eager heed lest a word might be lost, and every eye being watchful, lest an expression of face, motion or gesture might escape it. He was acting, indeed, the like of which we may never see again. The other characters were creditably sustained; that of Polonius by Watson; Laertes by Hurley, Ophelia, by M. McKean, and Claudius by Maynard deserving especial praise. There was not a fault or baulk or moment's hesitation during the play, the entire performance passing off with the precision of clock work.

To-night will be presented Kotzebue's thrilling tragedy entitled Pizarro, or the death of Rolla, with a cast that will be sure to bring out all the beauty, grandeur and sorrow of the play. Mr. Buchanan will sustain the character of Rolla. The performance will conclude with the impressive temperance drama, entitled Ten Nights in a Bar Room. That the house will again be filled, is a safe prediction.

Messrs. Miller and Miller have just received an unusually large, well assorted and strictly fashionable supply of piece goods, to which they ask special attention. The lot embraces the finest cloths and casimers ever brought to Cairo, and such a variety of styles that all tastes may be accommodated. Suits or garments from these goods are made to order in the best manner and latest style, and at figures that will defy competition. For proof of this they only ask to be put upon trial. "THE BEST IN USE"—Euders' Stomach Bitters.

We have, upon more than one occasion, commended that good sense in the people of Chicago, that recognizes Cairo as the gateway through which they must maintain their business intercourse with the South. Instead of foolishly contending that there are other and better channels for her commerce with that section, and instead of denying herself the profits of a large business because the same business might add something to the importance of Cairo, Chicago takes facts as she finds them, puts forth vigorous efforts to build up and aggrandize herself, at all times willing to "live and let live." The fruits of such a policy are seen in the fact that, during the past season the lower Mississippi river has scarcely been able to furnish tonnage for the vast amount of Chicago freight the Illinois Central railroad has poured into Cairo. In one day alone, fifteen thousand barrels of flour, and one hundred and seventeen car loads of other merchandise were deposited here for shipment, by that railway, while hundreds of carloads were standing at way stations along the route awaiting an opportunity to come forward. It is safe to say, we think, that, since the 1st day of February, the I. C. R. R. has brought to Cairo no less than twelve thousand tons per week, for shipment South, or for sale here.

Let St. Louis aid and urge forward the Cairo and St. Louis railroad, bury her foolish hostility for Cairo, and, what the Illinois Central is doing for Chicago, the Cairo and St. Louis railroad will do for St. Louis.
